ABOUT THE NATIONAL SEMINAR

The twenty first century has created a challenging environment in managing business all over the globe. A sea change is observed during the last two decades because of the governmental policies and active involvement and initiatives of various actors. The current scenario of Management Education should reflect the demand and supply of business and explore avenues for entrepreneurship practice. It is widely accepted that the process of globalization is due to rapid flow of communication and goods across countries. Notwithstanding the improvement of well-being of individuals and communities in India, many social and sectoral groups have not fully realized the fruits of globalization and did not foray into entrepreneurship. This is due to lack of awareness of management education and non-accessibility of resources that can greatly be attributed to the prevailing social structure of our country. Transformation of class structure through entrepreneurship is a difficult process, as most of the communities are at the receiving end. Breaking these barriers, the upsurge of lower rung entrepreneurs in metropolitan cities is an ...
